[Impact of institutionalisation on part Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory; views of those who grew up under the dormitory system; Aboriginal people were brought from all over the Top End to Kahlin Compound, which was later transferred to Bagot Reserve; Retta Dixon Childrens Home administered by the Aborigines Inland Mission; assimilation; child welfare; children; institutional care. This book traces the history of the social and political forces behind the institutionalisation of part-Aboriginal people in the Northern Territory, and the impact that it had on their lives. It focuses initially on the Kahlin Compound to which part-Aboriginal people from all over the Northern Territory were brought as a result of the selected breeding program initiated by the Commonwealth government under the Aborigines Act 1911. Part of the Kahlin Compound later became the Retta Dixon Children's Home which operated until 1980. Through the use of oral history with former residents of the Home and the Compound, the author describes the experiences of the residents, as well as the social and psychological effects this form of displacement had on those involved].
